SmilePerfected(TM) knows that confidence and enthusiasm during a job interview is so important in making a positive impression.

A quick Google search for "Smile During a Job Interview" will bombard the searcher with how important a smile is during the job search.

Studies have shown that if an applicant doesn't like their smile they will consciously hide their smile.

Nicole Vukom of Demand Media, outlined recently "How to Smile in an Interview" writing that it is the little things that can make the difference in a job interview. She continues to point out that a smile is more than common courtesy. A smile shows enthusiasm about the job and the interview.

Enthusiasm is key, says Richard Nelson Bolles, author, "What Color is Your Parachute?" as reported in a 2007 MSNBC successful job interview article. Prospective employers want to see energy, a willingness to work, and a bright smile will help convey that.

Nancy R. Mitchell, The Etiquette Advocate, states, "Don't Underestimate the Power of a Smile." She talks about how a lack of "smile" may imply being mad, nervous, or psychotic, emphasizing that a great smile shows a pleasant nature as well as confidence; it invites others to get to know one's true personality.

D.A. Hayden and Michael Wilder wrote an article and described "your smile during a job interview as your biggest secret weapon." They go on to say that a good smile shows the employer the prospect is warm and friendly, which are desirable assets for all employers.

In an interview with SmilePerfected(TM) CEO, William L. Balanoff, DDS, MS, FICD, Dr. Balanoff explained that companies have a responsibility to help people in their community in ways that are imaginative and innovative. Dr. Balanoff can't hire everyone but he states that his company has the ability to impact people's lives by giving them a better smile.
